Luciana Langoni

Since she was a child, Luciana has been interested in exploring fantastical universes and writing short stories about them. She always wished for the ability to speak to animals. Her love for all things magical has turned into the detailed world she built for her fictional works.

She has published two novels, with Maga de sangre being the latest one. In 2020 she published a Bestiary gathering all the magical creatures of her own creation.

She lives in Mexico City with her two dogs: Nickza and Bianca.

After a plane crash, Julieta and Daniel are reincarnated in another world; her, as Kouzel, abandoned since childhood in the forest of the barbarians; him as Novak, the eldest son of the leader of the ice territory, a hunter obsessed with exterminating all sorcerers. Kouzel does not know that she was born with the most dangerous magic on The Second Earth and that her nightmares contain the truth about that life that she shared with her great love. But when she meets Novak again, he doesn't recognize her. With the help of Nickza, a wild felux with an inexplicable connection to her, a seer and an animal magician, she must try to make sense of her visions not only to discover who she was in another land, but also who she is now. On the other hand, the most powerful blood mage on The Second Earth knows of her awakening and will do everything possible to fan her darkness. With Kouzel on his side, he will take revenge and start a war against his greatest enemies: the hunters.

«In Maga de Sangre, Langoni builds a world that mixes elements of Tolkien and J. K. Rowling, offering a magnetic read that captivates from the first page. The author demonstrates a mastery in the creation of unforgettable characters and settings that evoke a cinematic vision, making this work a unique literary experience.»

Contra Réplica

«Renewal. Rebirth. Second chances. With these foundations, Luciana Langoni built her dark fantasy novel Maga de sangre, a sinister title that gives us a taste, however small, of what we can expect between its pages.»

Augusto loses his father and becomes his mother companion until she dies. He decides to move to Tlacotalpan and, for the first time, he begins to pay attention to women. There, he meets a young Ukrainian woman with whom he begins a friendship. They spend their days together while she stands by the river, waiting for her boyfriend. On the day he asks her to give him a chance, the boyfriend comes back to take her with him. Years later, Augusto gets sick and now, in his dying agony, he cannot tell the fantasy from the reality. Originally, the author conceived this story as a cinematographic script, who directed it as well. It was released in 2015, starred by Aislinn Derbez and Flavio Medina. It obtained two “Diosas de Plata” which is a cinematographic award granted to the best Mexican films.

Carmina talks to the dead since she was a child. She lives in a world of darkness where the regret and the desire for her revenge kept her in the depths of a dead home, haunted by feelings as black as the coal that can be found in the mines of Coahuila.

In a mantel she embroiders with black hair the names of the Calderón family, who she hates. In the center of it, stands out the name El Cura, a priest from the past who for her it is not worth to even mention his name.

When her sister, Ada, dies, she has no other option than to turn to her past, meet up with her relatives, and try to reconstruct her story. On the other hand, the death of various miners in Pasta de Conchos bring up in Bernardo, Carmina's nephew, the memories of poverty and the anger of injustice that he will try to recompose through his work as a journalist.

In this novel, Mónica Castellanos retraces the journey to hell, including the personal ones, like Carmina's and Bernardo's, as well as those of the miners who died due to the negligence of many and who, once again, were buried in the shadows.

Press for Red Coal

«Carbón rojo is a novel that burns. A burning edge that goes straight to the memory. Its precise prose manages to inform, while generating a feeling against oblivion.»

Élmer Mendoza

«The novel is permeated with pain, and Mónica Castellanos works the setting in such a way that it feels natural and the reader can unfold in the story as a sort of witness.»

Ivana Lamas / Informador

«Carbón rojo is an enclave where two stories converge: that of Carmina and her grudges, her past and her family, especially Bernardo, her great-nephew, who finds in Pasta de Conchos the beginning of his journalistic career, as well as those of the miners who lost their lives and those who survived.»

Daniel de la Fuente / Reforma

«Mónica Castellanos is beyond a doubt a novelist of first category who knows how to create characters, who creates a dramatic feeling in her stories and that shares with us titles that can endure any kind of criticism.»

During the time of Porfirio Díaz' rule, the population's dissatisfaction and restlessness grew bigger and bigger. Different groups opposed to Díaz began to organize to challenge the president, among them, a group led by Francisco L. Madero. The "Maderistas" would then position themselves in different parts of Mexico and the southern United States, specifically in San Antonio, Texas, a key point for the fight.

María, at the time only 15 years old, was a young woman with a revolutionary spirit who wanted to escape her privileged social standing to promote women's suffrage, participate in politics, and dedicate her life to those who are in the utmost need for help. The writings of Práxedes G. Guerrero published in the newspaper Regeneración and Les misérables, by Victor Hugo, would instill that audacity and drive in her. But it would not be an easy task: her mother's care and social customs, together with the restrictions of being a woman, would make her face many different obstacles.

However, fate is turned upside down when she meets a young doctor who recently arrived in San Antonio, Daniel Chapman. Soon, he will become a confidant and friend, as a powerful bond will bind them together.

Press for The Scent of Longing

«Great author, Mónica Castellanos gifted us with a delicious story that takes place at the beginning of the Mexican revolution. With its particular style, it takes us to the cities where plans were made in order to take down the dictator Porfirio Díaz.»

Conjurando Letras

«Mónica Castellanos publishes her novel with the intention of giving women the place they deserve when they have been left aside, among the shadows, even if with allowed the construction of a better society with her work and daily labor. Through the character of María Treviño, a young woman about to turn 16, the author pays homage to the women who, from the industry, the factories, the field and the home, have worked and forged contemporary Mexico.»

These are the days of Franco and Hitler. Among the thousands of refugees from the Spanish Civil War, Guillermina Giralt and Francesc Planchart, two young Catalans will live one of the most moving stories in their attempt to survive the French internment camp in Argelès-sur-Mer. But they will not be the only ones. Thousands of men, women and children, intellectuals, artists, peasants, workers will leave their homes, face inhuman conditions of life and fight to preserve the most precious thing they have: their lives.

In that uncertain future a man will emerge, the Mexican consul Gilberto Bosques who risking his life and his family's, will suffer the arrest of the Gestapo and go beyond his diplomatic functions to save thousands of people from the most cruel and harrowing persecution of history.

Press for The Hours Taken from Us

«The prose and masterful narrative structure give to the book a sense of agile reading, leaving the reader eager to know more about Gilberto Bosques, accomplishing what I have always considered to be the effect of a good historical novel: take the reader on a path that will make him wish to know more about history.»

Conjurando Letras

«The novel allows us to know, through the beautifully narrated short chapters, the background of Don Gilberto, his love for education, language, and journalism; his revolutionary spirit. In the course of 331 pages —that slide away like water— we meet the teacher, diplomatic, communicator, father, and friend, and we understand the fear, sadness, suffering, and despair of many exiles through the voice of different characters along the novel that Mónica builds with mastery.»

Karla Trejoluna / Es lo cotidiano

«In her book Aquellas horas que nos robaron, Mónica Castellanos shares with us the endearing story of resistance and strength of an extraordinary Mexican man that challenged over and over again the laws of the state to attend to the right we all have to enjoy a dignified future and freedom.»

In the fifties, Raquel and Alejo live the most wonderful love story, but it is a secret. Because of his prejudice, Raquel's father is opposed to their relationship. One fateful day, they are discovered, which awakens her father's anger, who will decide to punish the young lovers. The forced separation is imminent; Alejo ends up in the Peruvian Amazon while Raquel seeks asylum in Paris with her grandmother.

Within the best tradition of Latinoamerican novel, Mariana García Luna brings us into an onerotic universe where, alongside Raquel and Alejo, Carmina, Nana and Santiago will join their fates, many years later, thanks to a mysterious wedding dress. Each of these characters will narrate the story from their perspective, one of them doing so from the realm of the dead in the shape of a ghost wandering through the rainforest.

Rubén Pablo Alcocer is a 54-year-old private detective who lives in Saltillo. He could have been a philosopher, and, perhaps that would have been better for him, since his most recent job has taken him to an extremely complicated situation: a man and a woman have tied him to a chair. They also placed a plastic bag over his head and stuck toothpicks under his nails. His kidnappers want to know where the old diamond necklace is, the one that once belonged to the Rumanian crown. To endure the torture, Rubén will reminisce the jewel's story, which goes back to the 15th century, and through the lives of several European dynasties, where Napoleon, the Queen Victoria, and even the Count Dracula are involved. Walking through this labyrinth of stories might be the key to elude death.

This fascinating tale which is both a thriller and a historical novel reminds us that every family has its jewels, its rocks, and different types of people which together form a mosaic of love, betrayal, and desire. But also, of memory and loss. Sometimes, even of a desire to forget

Pres for The Family Jewels

«With great delicacy he leads us through the labyrinths of history and the mind, and page after page he presents us with exciting events, at times like a dizzying thriller, and at others, like a profound explosion of human nature.»

«Joyas de la familia is a novel full of anecdotes, and delusions, not only in its plot, but also in its conception. The most recent book by the Saltillo writer Sergio Avilés took 30 years to reach its publication, but with it comes a journey through a maze in the history of a valuable object.»

Madrid, 1599. Following her mother's sudden death, fifteen-year-old Isabel goes to live in the family home of her father, the poet and war hero Miguel de Cervantes, a man she has never met. Forced to pose as a maid to conceal her illegitimate status, Isabel must adapt to a new way of life with her jealous cousin and protective aunts while she waits for her father to return from Seville. Meanwhile, in the nearby town of Esquivias, Miguel's pious and faithful wife Catalina similarly awaits his return, blissfully unaware of Isabel's existence.

As Miguel works on the manuscript that will become his masterpiece, Don Quixote, the years pass and Isabel grows into womanhood, falling in and out love, uncovering family secrets, and yearning for the legitimacy denied her by a rigid and callous society. Capturing two tumultuous decades of Golden Age Spain in rich historical detail, Martha Bátiz paints a compassionate portrait of a family on the precipice of great change and the fiercely independent woman at its centre striving to make a life of her own.

A daughter finds a rift in her family: her parents are separated and the house where she and her siblings are growing up is becoming increasingly populated by memories. In June 2006, the father of Karina--the protagonist of this story--leads a social struggle to topple Oaxaca's government and seek justice. A battle that brings along the stigma of prison. A fight that leaves the city burning. While dealing with her father's abandonment and social persecution, Karina tries to figure out who she has been and who she is now as a woman. She pushes the roadblocks in her memory to reach the past, her unstable and sorrowful childhood: the dark zone from which the long shadow of a totemic father emerges. In this, her second novel, Karina Sosa amplifies her stylistic talent and gives us a deep, nostalgic, hurt story. A book where she courageously subdues words such as love and freedom. Orphaned asks: Can you dig deep and come out unharmed? And it answers: No way.

Press for Orphanhood

«With an intimate and heartbreakingly beautiful style, Karina Sosa offers a privileged, yet painful testimony of one of the social movements that shaped the face of contemporary Mexico.»

Fernanda Melchor

«This book is proof that you can trust your own powers. And of course he does not come out unscathed, but he does come out full of words that expose him: the wounds fester between words: from there comes the suffering human condition, what unites us to others. »

Pura López-Colomé

«Like (Elena) Ferrante, Sosa is interested in power relations and the emotional burden that parents impose on their children.»

Daniel López Aguilar / La jornada

«Karina is not a historian, nor a social scientist; It tries to narrate or transmit to us its legitimate experience, but at the same time it deals with a lived history that is already part of the collective memory.»

Guillermo Fadanelli

«Without affectations or drama, without exultation or pathos, without sentimentality and much less pamphleteering temptations, with a surreptitious, sly humor, common among some Oaxacans, in Orfandad, the book recently published by Random House, Karina Sosa has risked recreating the memories of those days of barricades, of struggle, of resistance, of prison.»

In a room in the city of Oaxaca, a young female architect writes and reads the diaries that she has accumulated in the span of ten years. It has been six hundred days since her mother died. The only thing Ka knows about her mother is that she suffered from her nerves and that she loved horses. Leonora, her mother, has always been a ghost to her.

Ka goes looking for her own story while she adapts to being back again in the city, to her new job, to the streets, to love and to the libraries. At the same time, she starts to find out more about the life of her mother and her love for horses. Leonora is a blank space, a mystery that Ka will try to answer with a writing that oscillates between her memories, quotes and literary references. Throughout a patient and crystalline prose, this novel ponders over absence, lies, solitude, family narratives and the capacity of human beings to tell stories that give them identity and a place in the world.

Press for Ghost Horse

«It is a novel, but it is also a journal and an essay about fiction. The story stems from fragments with a paused and intimate writing. The narrative voice is a young architect who is passionate about literature and whose mother died almost two years ago.»

Aristegui Noticias

«The story manages to build a peculiar world and atmosphere that sticks to your skin even if you have closed the book.»

Jury of the First Novel Award 2021

«The novel acquires the shape of a library where personal experiences and art coexist.»

Roberto Pliego / Milenio

«One of the most powerful elements of the novel is how it builds this inquiry, how it articulates the search for the ghost, how it narrates it. And there it is the poetic labour, the manner in which it administrates what is said and what is kept quiet, the manner in which it strains the borders of what is narrated and what is not told. »

A town is about to disappear under water due to the construction of a dam. The people working for the Government try to convince Violeta to leave the house where she grew up with her grandmother, but she refuses to leave all of her dead behind: her grandmother recently died, her mother took her own life after Violeta was born, her daughter died during childbirth. The desolate and timeless universe that Suzette Celaya builds in Nosotras is a chilling metaphor for our search for roots as a response to the violence of the present, and to the helplessness of inhabiting a world sunk in hopelessness.

«Suzette Celaya Aguilar is an author with a powerful inner world that translates into a novel that often takes our breath away. He builds his story with a language that smells of dust, bones, sweat, with a deep poetic sense. It is worth getting closer to the power of this writer, a unique voice in the panorama of literature in Spanish.»

Guillermo Arriaga

«Although Nosotras is not a strictly feminist novel, it addresses issues of machismo and the role of women in a patriarchal society. Celaya wanted women to be the protagonists, exploring the complexities of their relationships and power dynamics.»

Newsweek Español

«Based on a story that wanders between realism and fantasy, Suzette Celaya Aguilar makes her literary debut with a story where loves tie you to the earth.»

Forbes

«With a great narrative sense and a precise and forceful poetic tone, Suzette Celaya builds a novel with a solid literary quality that moves page after page.»

Ever since he heard it on a night of partying in Lisbon, the narrator has become obsessed with the mysterious story of Santiago's father, Pol Espasí, a Catalan exiled in Portugal during the Spanish Civil War, who died leaving a trail of questions related to various documents linked to the smuggling of art pieces and a Nazi spy network. Through a series of investigations, the protagonist and Santiago intend to unravel the tangle surrounding the death of the possible spy, his involvement with German agents during World War II, and the unusual literary life of the narrator's great-grandfather, who wrote an alternate version of Don Quixote, comparing his delusions with those of the ingenious nobleman. Revealing these mysteries will put the two friends in front of a reality that they may not be prepared to face.

Press for Lisbon's Gold

«The story immerses itself in these scenes of German spies and agents in the Second World War, but it also covers the life of the narrator—who has a lot and little of Riveroll—and the memories he has about the life of his great-grandfather and his text about the ingenious gentleman Don Quixote of la Mancha.»

«Juan Patricio Riveroll tells a story that runs in different cities and at different times, going from Lisbon to Mexico City and from the first look of the 20th century in Mexico to the Portugal of the Second World War, in a plot that combines the smuggling of pieces of art and a Nazi spy network with an alternate version of Don Quixote.»

Mexico, 1954. After abandoning a Guatemala beaten by the armed intervention of the CIA. Ernesto, a young Argentinian doctor, crosses the border to Chiapas on his way to Mexico City. He works as a photographer, salesman or as security officer in order to bring food to the table. His time in the Mexican capital transforms him each day and leads him to meet Hilda Gadea once more. She is one of his greatest loves and soon they start living together in a small apartment in la colonia Cuauthémoc. One night, Ernesto happens to meet Raul, a young Cuban that has just arrived in the country – fleeing from Cuba—and his brother Fidel.

This encounter will change the destiny of Ernesto since he will become involved in the plan of the brothers Castro to free Cuba. In Al Filo de la Revolución, Juan Patricio Riveroll force us to look at an obscured period in the life of Ernesto Guevara: the key years in which the famous Latin American started to establish himself as a guerrillero and freedom fighter in order to become an icon of the world.

Verónica Langer

Verónica Langer was born in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1953. Her parents, of Viennese origin, came to Argentina as a result of the Second World War, persecuted for their origin and ideology. She studied medicine in her hometown, a career she abandoned in 1974 when she emigrated to Mexico because of the threats she suffered by Triple A (The Argentine Anti-communist Alliance). She has lived in this city ever since. She studied Acting at the National School of Theater Art and also Hispanic Literature at UNAM.

She has been a constant presence in cinema, theater and television in the last forty years and, in parallel to acting, she has dedicated herself to writing, many times to present her own shows. She has participated in more than sixty plays, among which are The Great Man, under the direction of the brilliant Julio Castillo; Easter by August Strindberg, directed by Héctor Mendoza; a monologue Alcira or the poetry in arms by Roberto Bolaño, The fair woman by Sándor Márai, among others. She was a member of the stable cast of the National Theater Company.

Cielo Cruel is a generational novel that narrates the discovery of desire in three different women. Like an initiation journey, the desire to know the sea will be for Mar, the daughter, a meeting point between passion and the lucidity of a sensual awakening. With a mixture of guilt and pleasure, her days will pass by testing the superstition of her villainous name, a destiny that she will seek to break alongside Alejo, a man younger than her who will make her face her deepest fears.

On the other hand, Gloria, the mother, will transgress the meaning of marriage, by trying to live at the same time with her husband and with her best friend. And it will be from the memory and recreation of violent episodes during the time after the Mexican Revolution, that Grandma Belén will show the strength of a woman who knows how to love herself and who does not need a man to achieve fulfillment.

Three women, three different times, the same blood in which Maritza M. Buendía, with her particular style, makes us question and rethink the idea of desire and the body among the winds of a heaven that is, ultimately, cruel.

Press for Cruel Sky

«Three chained timelines at the border of carnal desire, sensuality, guilt, pleasure, and fear. The grandmother, Belén, shows her hunger for freedom; the mother, Glorea, breaks the traditional marriage code; the daughter, Mar, is torn between doubt and enjoyment as she faces a sexual awakening. The author presents her readers with a novel that weaves three stories together as they unfold on the turbulent geographies of love.»

Álvaro Uribe

Álvaro Uribe Mateos (Mexico City, 1953) graduated with a degree in Philosophy from the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM). He served as Cultural Attaché in Nicaragua and Cultural Advisor in France. He was the director of several UNAM editorial collections. In his first stay in Paris he edited the bilingual magazine Altaforte. He later coordinated several collections in CONACULTA.

His prose has always received great praise from readers and critics. Several of his works were translated into French, English, and German.

He was the author of Topos (La máquina de escribir, 1980), El cuento de nunca acabar (Universidad de Veracruz, 1981), La audiencia de los pájaros (UAM-IZTAPALAPA, 1986), La linterna de los muertos (FCE, 1988, reprinted in 2006), Recordatorio de Federico Gamboa (Breve Fondo, 1999), La otra mitad (Aldus, 1999), La parte ideal (literary essays, 2006), Morir más de una vez (2011), Leo a Biorges (literary essays, 2012), and Historia de historias (Malpaso Ediciones, 2018). At Alfaguara he published Caracteres (essay fables, 2018). He won the 1976 Punto de Partida Poetry Competition for his piece Así es esto.

With Tusquets Editores he published El taller del tiempo (2003), winner of the Antonin Artaud Narrative Prize, Por su nombre (2001) and La lotería de San Jorge (2004), originally published in 1995. For Expediente del atentado (film adaptation known as El atentado, under the direction of Jorge Fons) Uribe obtained the Elena Poniatowska Ibero-American Novel Prize in 2008. Autorretrato de familia con perro (2014) was awarded the Xavier Villaurrutia Prize. In 2021 he published Los que no (Alfaguara).

Between January 2008 and March 2022, Álvaro Uribe faced cancer three times. The first time in his right lung; the second one, in 2018, in his prostate, and the third one, in his left lung. Álvaro won the first two rounds but lost the battle after the third encounter.

Each time, he kept a diary which not only recollected the vicissitudes of the disease, but also cemented the lucid inventory of his hopes and disquiets. This book gathers that trio of writings.

Álvaro Uribe writes with pure honesty and transparency about the fear, the sadness, the anger, the tiredness, and the sleepless nights. He writes about the otherness that h was pushed into by the disease.

He also writes about the reencounters with friendships, with literature itself, and, especially, about the love and shared existence he had with his wife, Tedi López Mills.

Tríptico del Cangrejo is the proof that Álvaro Uribe's life and his writing were a single unit. He wrote until his last day; he was convinced that the same fate that had placed him in the worst-case scenario had given him the "inalienable relief of writing".

Press for The Crab's Triptych

«It is not surprising that even here, or especially here, a few meters from death, Álvaro has persisted in his usual behavior and has taken care of the commas and the verbs and the adjectives and has endorsed that commitment of his, so his, to the phrase, paragraph, page, book.»

Rafael Lémus

«Álvaro's last book was a diary, the one about his death, an overwhelming, sad book, but no less intelligent and profound in search of the transparency that nothingness offers.»

Los que no (Those Who Did Not)

220 pages

Genre(s): Adult Fiction.

Spanish worldwide: Alfaguara, 2021.

As its title suggests, this novel of maturity is about those who did not reach the fullness they were promised. Those that did not arrive, although it is not possible to say exactly at where. Los Que No. A successful bureaucrat who metamorphoses into a millionaire restaurant owner and later becomes the victim of a kidnapping, just to die in his maturity from a devastating disease. A memorable Philosophy teacher who loses the love of his life to drug abuse and dies prematurely from a stroke.

A young poet and supposed genius who commits suicide in the face of the impossibility of achieving his dreams of greatness. A Literature student, the most outstanding of his generation, who ends up on the street, earning a meagre livelihood as an extra from movies. A musician of unquestionable talent who settles for being a musicologist and ends up sinking into silence.

The narration is made of these and other unsuccessful characters. It is also the inquiry of the not always satisfactory life of the narrator-protagonist. A dazzling exercise in style, the novel culminates in an original interpretation of the old precept that every man, to achieve a fulfilling life, must have a son, grow a tree, and write a book. And the book is, of course, the one in the reader's hands.

Press for Those Who Did Not

«He takes the reader in a back and forth narrative that is only one of the premises of the novel, since he also manages to submerge the reader in a different narrative dynamic in which the protagonist mixes his own anecdotes with the ones from the other characters to reveal what he truly lived, what he believes to remember, and how he would have liked to act.»

El Informador

«In his narratives, he undresses his characters in a brutal manner, showing their meanness, fickleness, frivolities and, at the same time, their tenderness, lack of love and rejection they suffer. »

Geney Beltrán

«Narrator-essayist submerged in reflexive stillness and drawn by the crossroads of fabulation from a way of looking at pressing and compassionate dispositions of creatures that take the risk to jump to unforeseen events while searching, perhaps, some commiseration under the forecasts of misfortune.»

La Razón

«Most people do not get to become and to do everything they might have been or done. Almost everyone reach half or three quarters of the path we might have treaded entirely. Expectations were cut short not because of guilt, action or neglect of each character, but because unpredictable accidents completely change the course of a life. They may have an extremely dramatic and drastic effect on it.»

Reyes Martínez Torrijos / La Jornada

«It is a magnificent book that combines the genre of the formative novel with his memoirs, a story of stories, of multiple voices, in which the narrator insisted on, as he did in all his other books, revealing himself, on unfolding, sharing and exploring himself.»

Yanet Aguilar / El Universal

«Álvaro Uribe is not only capable of containing those lives in a shell, but he also transforms them into models of those promising youngsters whose talent and charisma gives in to the temptation of failure.»

Orange blossom water can also dance like smoke from insomnia or timeless after-dinner conversation. This is how the friendship at first sight between the French diplomat Xavier Dupont and the writer he asked to write the novel about the life of his mother, Catalina, is born.

Catalina, born in Cochabamba, daughter of a Bolivian mogul, knows she is the most beautiful woman in the world, a fact that is confirmed after she is sent to Paris. There, she will float on tinsel clouds, she will be surrounded by luxuries, and will befriend the likes of Coco Chanel, Edith Piaf, and Albert Camus. She will become la plus belle femme of Paris, and the protagonist of what would be a fairy tale, if it wasn't a true story.

The narrator dives into the childhood he lived in Mantua, a forest near to Washington D.C. Chronicle of memories that ignited the low recovery of his mother's memory; May begins to remember some words that are names, the order of things, the disorder, things left to chance ... the trees of a forest. The narrator's childhood is the passage to recover his mother's past and the novel weaves these fragments like someone spins syllables over the snow of blank pages. Jorge F. Hernandez recreates the first fifteen years of his bilingual biography amid a forest that has remained intact in a shared memory and where the reader is suspended in the presence of the terrible enigma of Evil, of the worst side of North American utopia, which is only alleviated by the affections that last forever ... and that do not deserve to be forgotten.

Press for A Floating Forest

«The literature of Jorge F. Hernández has a lot of autobiographical. Not because his life is in the stories, but because it feeds on a personal and a collective memory when it approaches to favorable territories to show its ghosts, obsessions, or desires.»

Jesús Alejo Santiago / Milenio

«Un bosque flotante is more than a book of memories; it is also about the battle against oblivion, the recovery of remembrances, not just your own, but of others.»

Adriana Hernández Morales / Periodismo Hoy

«Months after turning 30, a thrombosis in her brain, erased the memory of May, the mother of Jorge F. Hernández. Many years later, in front of a platoon of a keyboard, he would sit down to write the story of his childhood, which is as well the story of the ‘slow recovery of May’s memory’.»

Ángel Soto / Milenio

«Jorge F. Hernández goes back to the forest of his childhood and leaves a testimony of the teacher who accompanies him in his first letters and readings, of the never-failing friend with whom he conquers all the paths amidst trees and shrubs, there where the American dream can also become a nightmare. Pages of a life that does not deserve forgetting.»

Alba is the daughter of a woman who hates lies. She herself bases everything in her life on that fundamental fact, although she grew up with the absence of one essential truth: the death of his father. When Alba leaves her mother, she does it in the company of Roberto, her boyfriend. They both decide to move to Grandma Theodora's town. That town is a place inhabited by strange beings and surrounded by black mangroves that keep secrets in their roots. This trip will not only mean ending her relationship with a mother who, turns out, lied to her for years, and even changed her name, but it will lead her to rediscover the stories of her grandmother, of the Tlanchana, of Imelda, and of her own father; although for that she must get rid of the people who anchor her to the past from which she is trying to escape—no matter how much he had come to love them. In the middle of those revelations, she will meet “the mute”, a character who will make her question everything she has ever considered to be true. The isolation, the loneliness, and the nostalgia will lead her to acknowledge her repressed desires and will force her to make decisions that will not only change her destiny, but that of everyone around her.

Susana de Murga

She was born in Mexico City in 1968. Susana de Murga has expressed in her work, among other themes, the otherness of urban life and the difficulties represented in the search for freedom. Her novel La vida en un bilván (Ediciones Felou, 2008) is a post-trauma psychological exploration; In Mejor morir bajo un zapato (Ediciones Felou, 2011) she examines the imprisonment of a teacher; Esperanzas en papel de arroz (Ediciones Felou, 2013), takes us into the world of drug dealing. Even though she writes about the severe reality, she is skilled in writing with humor, in a way in which she offers a profound and agile reading. Susana also practices her literary vocation as a teacher in literary creation workshops in Casa Lamm. El dolor de la memoria is her fourth novel.

Mariano is headed to the adventure of his dreams: running uphill with his motorcycle, in the company of his friends and sing out loud as the engines roar. However, as his bliss begins, he and a group of other people gets kidnapped. The criminals hurt and humiliate all of their victims and demand large amounts of money as ransoms. Slowly, all the victims are released; all except for Mariano, who will not believe what he must do in order to survive.

The long walk from where he is taken to the place in which he is held captive makes Mariano remember something his mind had kept locked away, an abuse he suffered as a child of which he had never spoken. Until now. Thus, he finds himself to be twice captured: once physically, and once emotionally.

He has written essays, plays, and film scripts; his script for the movie 7:19, directed by Jorge Michel Grau, premiered in 2016, and the one for the film Confesiones, directed by Carlos Carrera, were filmed this year. The movie will premiere in 2023. In 2018 he published the short-story collection Manos de lumbre (Páginas de Espuma), and the following year he published La noche en la zona M (FCE, Bank of Books Prize), a novel about a post-apocalyptic world.

«Best-kept-secret-of-Mexican-letters no more, Alberto Chimal has been hard at work building a literary world all of its own. A visionary and a risk-taker, Chimal is well-known for widely imaginative and surgically-written novels and short stories that defy easy classification. Scary City is no exception. Brilliantly rendered into English by D. P. Snyder, these two transmedial cross-genre pieces show Chimal at his minimalist best: his awareness of contemporary violence and his critical embracing of digital technologies, not to mention his abilities as a photographer, come into wondrous fruition in interconnected verbal and visual fragments that are both disturbing and compelling. Chimal comes as close as we will get to the secret palpitation of our present.»

Mexico, 1972. The years of fear and repression towards the students are not over. Gabriela is a young woman who has recently arrived at the UNAM in order to study and become an accountant, although, in fact, she ends up spending her time with the group of experimental theater of the university, whose leader is Teodoro, a young promise of the artistic scene. As soon as she becomes part of the rehearsals, she hears about the disappearance of a former actress, who apparently was seen for the last time on the day when students were slaughtered, The Corpus Christi Massacre. At first, everything seems to go along fine, but the group of experimental theater protects more than just one secret and a series of disturbing nightmares begins to haunt Gabriela, forcing her to face an inexplicable horror linked at first glance to the brilliant director, to her new friends, and to a hidden persistent force that surrounds them all.

Alberto Chimal surprises us with a blood-chilling and original thriller where supernatural horror gets confused with the violence of a time marked by prohibitions and ideological manipulation.

In the stories present in Manos de lumbre, as told by Jean-Paul Sartre, “there’s no need for red-hot poker, hell is other people”.

A writer that practices plagiarism, an obsessed woman under a misunderstood motherhood or a sick person facing the trance of choosing are some of Alberto Chimal’s characters that live in their own hell, dissimulation, manipulation or uncertainty. Chimal ignites a prose that emphasizes the nuance of the fantastic and that always explores limits. Thus, his literature is a game and a hypnosis, where we can introduce ourselves and, possibly, get burned.

El corredor is the howl of metal and literature, whose best feature is that it takes the reader to a paroxysm. That characteristic exaltation of the dervishes and of pilots whose bolide is envisioning, in a matter of seconds, the wall in which they could crash, the fire in which they would be torn apart by gears. Alejandro Vázquez Ortiz has managed to write a chrome plated narrative mechanism with several coats of painting where violence and despair coexist, where vertigo and void are the only certainties. Burned oil, endless highways that shine like the bright red desert, an embankment of gravel and concrete occupied by cars, blood, and pain.

Press for The Racer

«Even if the novel is not science fiction, it does share a few of its ideas, which places it within a more realistic tradition of the genre and explores the relationship between men and technology, and its impact in our lives. In the case of El corredor, we explore a type of violence contained inside the metal of a car's bodywork, one that cannot be stopped once it has been released, and it ends in a collision of fury, because, little by little the machinery takes over the humanity in an 'indubitable mediation' between technology and life, which starts to erase the idea of the human being.»

Christian García / Zócalo

«The book is part of a metaphor because, in the end, that is what scrap metal is, and the representation of these characters who are left aside, forgotten, marginalized is as well the personification of the character turned into waste, into something no one cares about, into someone who needs to search for his way to survive.»

Yanet Aguilar / El Universal

«The violence portrayed in El corredor is a structural violence, accepted, quotidian.»

Daniel de la Fuente / Reforma

«The result is a wide range of stories interwoven by the adrenaline behind the steering-wheel, one that ties its characters due to a complicated social structure in which they exercise violence 'without any sort of restraint when they think they have to'.»

Obed Rosas / Sin Embargo

«The author wanted to do something different. Like a dystopian novel, but not really, like that border science fiction takes you to, but that actually is the reality we live every single day.»

This novel is made of stories with different perspectives that make and shape each of the characters. We attend the decisive moment in the life of a family going through a summer that glides in an unsettling manner, revealing the secrets that each of them keeps. Secrets that confront them and force them to grow. To each chapter we add clues to complete an existential puzzle, where each one has his or her fraction of guilt and innocence. All taken from imagination of certainties of two girls who begin to discover the world from fantasy.

At a travelling fair, Maricarmen, the eldest of two sisters, has her fortune read by a serpent-woman; the resulting prophecy is both cryptic and frightening. From that point onwards, the sisters' lives, and the lives of those close to them, start circling around a real-life boa who lurks around their neighborhood, and the haunting apparition of a woman.

«With this title, Cecilia Eudave dives once more into the novelistic genre, without putting aside the brevity she is so fond of, since this book is more of a nouvelle. She weaves once more the threads of the amazement and the unusual into her ars poetica, where the amazing is present in every action of the characters, as well as fate and the sentence of a past and future that are labyrinth-like, with secrets that must be revealed and destinies that must be fulfilled.»

Alberto González / Nexos

«The novel's motif is family and, although it is not the main theme, it is always present since Cecilia Eudave considers the family nucleus to be extremely important due to the fact that it is the place where every vice and virtue is generated, both personal and social.»

What does photographer approached by a young woman on his computer, a woman who has forgotten the people in her life, a nondescript man searching for an extraordinary story, friends looking for a sinister bar, a policeman solving a brutal murder, twins harassed by an elusive presence, a married couple who accidentally hit a semi-human-looking bundle and a public accountant who, in order to hook up with a girl, appropriates an ancient prophecy to explain the appearance of the dark and deep holes scattered throughout the city, across the planet, have in common?

With her unusual narrative, Cecilia Eudave disturbs and makes the reader reach the end of his own fears as one more character, with stories full of strangeness, on the threshold, on that fine line that separates the real from the unusual, the reader has to decide on which side of the scale he wants to be positioned.

Magali watches over every single detail, every movement her characters make, especially Montserrat Montero, the character that glues everything together, a woman that at times is divided. She is an orphan, a bisexual lover, who has had an abortion and who designs jewelry.

At this age, she has an epiphany that may be of use for the rest of her life, after growing up, hesitating, loving, drinking beer, wine, desiring, studying, drinking coffee and always regarding herself as an incomplete being. I am certain that she perceives that Cerezas en París is an incredible addition to the contemporary Mexican narrative, even if I am unable to express it in the text she asked me, in the kindest manner possible, to write.

Press for Cherries in Paris

«Magali is a crafty narrator in the way in which she handles the tension, in the way in which she creates the atmosphere where her narrative takes place, in the way in which she uses the language of her time and creates a character from the very moment of her birth to the moment she turns thirty years old.»

Élmer Mendoza

«It is a novel that provokes a deep feeling of empathy for its characters. The reader will want to get closer to Montserrat and to know more about that mysterious being that is Maria, about the sweet intelligence of grandma Celia and about the huge house they all grow up in.»

«There are several transversal themes that shape the whole novel, although there are three that are emphasized: family, love and individuality. Albeit these themes are recurrent in most literature, Cerezas en París does not stem from commonplaces; instead, it explores these themes parting from different possibilities of Montserrat's personal bonds.»

La vida alegre is a humorous novel about second chances. In a glorious past, under the artistic name of Dalio Guerra “The Nightingale of the Americas”, his songs accompanied much of the musical history and the sets of Latin American alcoves. Today Sandalio Guerrero is an old bolero in a Venezuela that begins to crumble. At times rogue and cynical, Dalio will find in the young Poli the accomplice of his return to the stage regardless of the methods to achieve it. La vida alegre is the radiography of a friendship, as well as a survival manual in narrative key. A magical and unbridled Caribbean will be the setting of a story that reaffirms the importance of music to alleviate all the wrecks of life itself.

Press for The Joyous Life

«The novel unfolds in a simultaneous plot of beginnings and endings. The story moves forward in a succession of episodes where the characters are elevated from misery and ridicule by the swerves of fortune.»

Rodrigo Blanco Calderón / Rialta

«It is the story of the Venezuelan street life, the characters that star in this title are filled with rock, cinema and experiences. They are survivors who know how to laugh and enjoy daily life; it is an x-ray of a friendship, a story that cements the importance of music.»

Universidad Autónoma de Coahuila

«The work of Daniel Centeno rescues characters and scenes of life in Venezuela, being a deep, playful and picaresque text with characters that face reality and allow the readers to know the idiosyncrasy of Venezuelan people.»

Arcelia Ayup Silveti

«The book captivates the readers from its very cover and it invites them to discover its content. The author manages to capture their attention with every line, since he succeeds in presenting the characters as if they were a part of real life; the book is an homage to music and presents a people that still believes.»

Carlos René Padilla saw the light of the patrols in Agua Prieta, Sonora, in 1977. His first crime was studying Communication Sciences at the University of Sonora. He won the Sonoran Book Contest 2015 in the novel genre with Amorcito Corazón (NITRO/PRESS, 2016) and the National Contest of Black Novel “Una Vuelta de Tuerca” 2016 with Yo soy Espáiderman, published under the title Yo soy el araña by Reservoir Books in 2019.

His most recent book, Bavispe, presents a collection of short stories that explores themes of machismo, migration and longing for the rural life in the territories of Sonora. Given the characteristics of this text, it won the National Literature Award José Fuentes Mares 2022.

In a safety box he saves the memories of three more titles: El cielo se cambió de dirección (short stories), Renuencia al destino (poems) and One day of these days, Fabiola (novel). He has worked for the newspapers Expreso and El Imparcial, where he won a prize for “Depth Journalism” by the Inter-American Press Association.

He is currently under ‘house arrest’ in Ciudad Obregón, where he cooks for his wife and daughter, writes and at night escapes to “La Taberna de Moe”, a bar where they say he has never paid anything.

As it happens with hundreds of Mexican towns —especially those lost in the desert area—, if we were to ask for Bavispe to someone who does not belong to the region, perhaps he would answer that he has heard the name once, but it is possible that he will not even be able to pinpoint its location. It would seem that in order to really exist in the national imaginary, many of our peoples need a true bard that will make them his own, that will extract from them the passions, fears, desires and beliefs of their inhabitants and will make them known through his words.

This is what Carlos René Padilla has done in the tales that conform Bavispe, title that captures the story, and the stories, of that little town squashed by the heat and by an apparent monotony, to transform them in unforgettable narratives inhabited by ghosts and living beings ready to take away from us the placidity that comes from reading.

In the same manner of the best composers of corridos about towns, Padilla makes use of a language that in several instances is poetic but, at the same time, it is rooted in the orality to narrate, through a rhythm that is maintained from the beginning to the end of every piece; the book presents a variety of rural dramas that go from the presence of ghosts in the streets to the violence of accomplished vengeance, from the irony to the flirtation with the absurd, from love to hate, in a close, organic and cohesive universe: the one of the town itself through the years.

Press for Bavispe

«After reading these pages, not only will the readers know where Bavispe is, but also will be able to talk about it from a place of experience, knowledge and imagination.»

Eduardo Antonio Parra

«In this book, Padilla composes the image of a far-away town in the north of Mexico; the stories of Bavispe are an homage to its inhabitants, their traditions, the rural life and the own roots of the author.»

Infobae

«Because of the unity and balance of the collection of tales surrounding a mythical space, but that it is also real, because of the configuration of literary imaginaries and the polished prose that come together in the phantasmagoric of the 21st Century, Bavispe won the National Literature Award José Fuentes Mares 2022.»

Élmer Mendoza (Culiacán, Sinaloa, 1949) is a Literature Professor at the Autonomous University of Sinaloa, corresponding member of the Mexican Academy of Language, and part of the council of El Colegio de Sinaloa. He belongs to the National Creators System. He is a passionate teacher and a committed promoter of reading. From 1978 to 1995 he published seven volumes of short stories and two of chronicles.

In 1999, he published his first novel, Un asesino solitario (Tusquets, 1999), which immediately placed him as “the first narrator who rightly gathers the effect of the drug trafficking culture in our country”, according to the Mexican critic Federico Campbell. With El amante de Janis Joplin (Tusquets, 2001) he won the XVII National Prize for Literature José Fuentes Mares, and with Efecto Tequila (Tusquets, 2004) he was a finalist in the 2005 Dashiell Hammett Prize.

He continued writing novels such as Cóbraselo caro (Tusquets, 2005), Balas de plata (Tusquets, 2008) for which he unanimously won the third Premio Tusquets Editores de Novela, which established him as a front-line writer in the Hispanic novel scene. After La prueba del ácido (Tusquets, 2010), Nombre de Perro (Tusquets, 2012), and Besar al detective (Literatura Random House, 2015), he continued with the series of detective Edgar “El Zurdo” Mendieta with Asesinato en el parque Sinaloa (Literatura Random House, 2017). His most recent title is Ella entró por la ventana del baño (2021).

He has published as well No todos los besos son iguales, which can be classified as young adult literature, published in 2019 by Alfaguara. In 2021 he received an honoris causa doctorate from the Autonomous University of Sinaloa. In 2022, Tenerife Noir awarded him with the 2020 Black and Criminal Award given his indisputable trajectory as a writer of thrillers.

Sebastián Salcido, aka el Siciliano, is free after spending over two decades in prison. He is the leader of a ruthless group of ex-militaries dedicated to drug trafficking. Far from being weakened by his time in jail, he is now searching ferociously for revenge against the former police commander who managed to get him arrested. Lefty Mendieta must now catch him, but sooner than later, he will discover that he is dealing with one of the most powerful and soulless rivals that he has had to face in his whole career as a detective.

As if things were not difficult enough already, Lefty Mendieta has another mission: finding the old love of Ricardo Favela, an eighty-six-year-old dying businessman. His dying wish is to see the woman with whom he lived a passionate affair twenty-two years ago, but Ricardo does not even know her name.

Samanta Valdés, leader of the cartel of the Pacific and friend of Lefty, decides to help him since she seems to know who this woman is. El Siciliano has now become a relentless threat. What will be the result of this alliance against one common enemy? Lefty Mendieta is on a race against time and now he must face that infallible enemy that is death. Will he find Favela's old mistress? Maybe you will have to help him find the last clue.

Veronica Rosenthal, Nuestro Tiempo's most daring journalist, has found herself in the middle of an unexpected situation: former magazine's director Andres Goicochea, and his previous romantic partner, have been murdered in cold blood, and her friend, Paula, has been kidnapped in a matter of hours. Her boss, Patricia, is at the hospital with a bullet lodged inside her lung. With her closest circle on high alert and under threat of imminent danger, Vero wonders if maybe the research Andrés was working on —about the links between some powerful characters and the criminal world— could possibly be the reason behind so many catastrophes.

On the other hand, an old childhood friend —her playmate from the Villa Crespo neighborhood— shows up out of the blue to add even more tension to these circumstances. And Federico, the lawyer who works at her father's firm/studio, and with whom she seemed to have established a legitimate love story, experiences a crisis of indecision after the arrival of a promising young professional at the firm.

Press for The Best Enemy

«Verónica is the girl who all the time is breaking the paradigm male female’, says the author. He elaborates on the sexual freedom this woman going on 35 years old experiences, who does not impose on herself the paradigm of defining herself in terms of her sexual orientation.»

Patricio Pidal / La nación

«This is the fourth thriller starred by the journalist Verónica Rosenthal, ‘female character who has the intention of restoring a little bit of truth and justice around a criminal act’. In the plot, there also leaks the theme of the violation to human rights perpetrated by Israel in Palestine.»

Silvina Frieria / Página 12

«The most important thing is to prioritize fiction over the historical, the journalistic.»

Emilia Racciati / Infobae

«It combines a plot that weaves the political-social actuality (sometimes it is the political corruption, the power of the Church, also the exploitation of the oppressed and machismo) with a repertoire of prototypical characters. But, in addition, it does not neglect the feminist reflection of the Argentinian society that, in here, works as a theoretical frame.»

Débora Campos / Clarín

«A novel influenced by Boris Vian and Simenon who begins with a realist tone and ends with a Gargantuan erotic-police apocalyptic fest.»

Mariana Enríquez

«This is an excellent story, well told and translated, which sustains a high level of tension throughout. The reader is well aware of the risks to Veronica and those she co-opts in her research, and these culminate in violent and gripping action. In the background we have Buenos Aires, with great disparities of wealth and prevalent corruption, but a strong sense of life being lived to the full.»

After fleeing and being captured, Santoy admitted to having attacked his ex-girlfriend Érika and murdered her siblings, Érik and María Fernanda, just children, in addition to kidnapping Catalina, the family's maid. Less than a month later, Santoy accused Érika of being the children's murderer. His second story was widely accepted and produced other versions that ended up permanently clouding the truth.

Armed with information that has been lost or never assimilated and joining the pieces of history in a meticulous manner, Javier Munguía proposes that the reader of The Cumbres Case reexamine the facts from another perspective and face a disturbing scenario: a society that turns its back on the victims and He becomes one more of his executioners.

The right is a political, cultural, economic, government, educational project and is above all of the above. The right in Mexico, with all its nuances, intensities and even divergences, is one and very cohesive: it has not renounced the old conservative project of establishing a Catholic government nor has it stopped fighting secularism, sexual education and the secularization of society. society, but has prioritized large economic interests, public and private, national and transnational, with a tendency increasingly inclined towards corruption. That's what the Right talks about. Power, corruption and deception, the last book in the trilogy by journalists Álvaro Delgado and Alejandro Páez Varela.

The family resorted to donations to transport one of the greatest Mexican revolutionaries, who died in captivity, from the United States. The new regime elevated Francisco I. Madero to the rank of martyr but denied recognition to a social fighter who had made the armed feat possible.

"What needed to be told is that the Mexican left is not a product of spontaneous generation, but of resistance. That it has survived for decades the persecution of the State, the appropriation of discourse, a party (the PRI) that devoured the Revolution of 1910 so as not to be forced to fulfill its postulates. A left that justifies itself in the deep inequality and in the desire to reverse it, to end it. A left that resisted murders and forced disappearance; that for a century has faced an overwhelmingly dominant, skillful and accommodating current of thought: the right", say the authors in this new book that comes after The Dispute over Mexico.

«The journalists analyze the leftist project set in motion by the president Andrés Manuel López Obrador and which the prominent figures of Morena define as social, progressive and popular, but that is constantly criticized of being anachronistic and authoritarian.»

For anyone who’s in search of their passion, their purpose, and their opportunity to change the world, this is the right book. This is a book full of stories that will offer you ideas, travel chronicles, reflections, quotes, tweets, a lot of inspiration, motivation, and topics that will give you a new perspective on how the world works, how creativity works, and above all, this book will become a personal journey to help you transform all of your “impossibles” into “possibles”.

Press for I Have Something to Tell You

«In a world filled with fear and uncertainty, Alfonso uses his platform to motivate others to discover their own talents and make the most of their passions, giving them tools and simple ideas from his own history, going from the it can be done to how to get it done.»

José Caparoso, transmedia editor in Forbes

«This book is for the brave ones that not only make questions, but that seek answers. Alfonso deals with two extremely important themes that are also very hard: knowing where you want to go in your life and giving yourself the space to decide and plan it.»

Héctor de la Hoya / Benshots

«This book is addressed to all the people who has the intention of doing something and of answering once more the question: and now what's next? That is a recurrent theme throughout the book, how once you have accomplished a goal, you have to ask yourself: and now what's next?»

Xóchitl Martínez / El Informador

«The author highlights that it is not a manual to follow his advice literally, but that what he wanted to do was to give voice to his personal experience.»

Andrea Sáenz-Arroyo

Andrea Sáenz-Arroyo (1971) is a Marine Biologist with a PhD in Economics and Environmental Studies. She has worked all her life to understand the conditions that allow societies to generate solid, sustainable, and inclusive economies committed to nature's care. She is currently a Professor and Researcher at the Department of Conservation of Biodiversity at the Colegio de la Frontera Sur and part of the National System of Researchers (SNI).

She has published articles in several international scientific journals and Mexican educational media. Sáenz-Arroyo has written for some of the most important Mexican newspapers such as La Jornada, Reforma, Milenio and Animal Político. In 2011 she received the Pew Award for Marine Conservation, one of the most prestigious awards worldwide, due to her work on the design of ecological restoration strategies with the fishing communities of Baja California. Her first book, Un mar de la esperanza was written with the support of the scholarship that granted this award.

Humanity is trapped inside a critical paradox: as a species and civilization we are entirely dependent on the natural resources we can reap from all around us. However, the economic model under which we live and work relies upon the exploitation of nature and the environment. We have become the main destructive force, responsible for the sixth massive extinction on the planet, we have diminished the atmosphere's capacity to regulate our climate, and we are exhausting the resources that essential for our survival, like water. But are there any alternatives?

In this book, marine biologist Andrea Sáenz-Arroyo brings us a hopeful perspective. Inspired by a number of personal experiences in some communities in Baja California, where she witnessed how citizens self-organize in order to harness the ocean's resources in a responsible and sustainable way, the author set out on a journey around the globe in search of similar realities. In this way, she will lead us across Iceland, Galicia, northern Denmark, the coast of California, and the islands of Fiji, to show us proof of societies that have been able to care for the world's ecosystems and, at the same time, grow and prosper. Un mar de esperanza is a book for every person who is eager to find solutions to the environmental crisis we are living in; it is a breath of fresh air in the middle of this world-wide storm of hopelessness.

Press for A Sea of Hope

«In this book, the marine biologist and environmental economist explains to us, with simplicity, erudition and depth, the relationship between the defense of our environment and the old dispute between private and collective interests. A greater equity, balance and harmony in the society turn out to be the natural consequence of this organization.»

Alejandro Frank / Letras Libres

«People talk about small communities that develop an environmental intelligence, an ecological intelligence, which makes the author wonder why that is not the case in the cities.»

Pamela Cerdeira / MVS noticias

«It is a mandatory reading for all of us who worry about our world, about creating auto-sustainable economies, about leaving a better planet to the future generations. Hopefully, it will be a mandatory reading in high-schools and universities; it will become an inspiration to young people who will have a new way of looking into the future. There is so much to do; there is hope.»

La terraza literaria

«In this text, she explains how her interest in studying the problematic of a sustainable planet was born, relating it to her past, her childhood and her life, which made her get close to the concern for the environment and for understanding how we ended up turning our paradise into hell.»

Eduardo Huchín Sosa

Eduardo Huchín Sosa was born in Campeche in 1979. He is a musician and writer. However, as the editor of the Mexican magazine Letras Libres, he spends most of his time rushing before going to press. He has published three non-fictional books: ¿Escribes o trabajas? (Tierra Adentro, 2004), Ni siquiera es un trabajo, pero alguien tiene que hacerlo (Posdata editores, 2014); and Usted se encuentra aquí (Secretaría de Cultura de Campeche, 2013). His most recent book is Calla y escucha. Ensayos sobre música de Bach a los Beatles (Turner, 2022).

A guitar player since he was 12, he is part of the duet Doble Vida, with Elisa Corona, which has released two albums: La misma ciudad (2012) and Los días normales (2018). He loves pop music, classical music, church music and extreme metal.

How did Bach modernize music and why do his arrangements still delight us and amaze us? What were the Beatles' contributions to contemporary music, and why is it still a band that cannot be compared to others? What do musicians outside of the elites do in order to survive? Is there humor to be found in music? Was Gabilondo Soler, known as Cri Cri, a poet, a genius madman, or just misunderstood? Is there humor in music, beyond acting and words? What do music videos mean, the symbiosis between image and sound?

Rigorous literary critic, professional musician, and editor at Letras Libres, Eduardo Huchín Sosa, answers with banter, erudition, and sensibility to this assortment of questions in the bright collection of essays that conform this book. A book to shut up and listen. Come close. Can you hear that?

Press for Keep Quiet and Listen

«It reunites eight texts that, given its structure (both chaotic and inevitable), its sharp prose and great sense of humor present the testimony of an untiring curiosity regarding the edges of creation, reception and commercialization of music. It manifests also the goal of great essays: being able to talk about anything and captivating the reader who could not care less about the topic in question.»

Pablo Martínez Lozada

«Eduardo brings to the front page the absurd we had not noticed before, which involves almost always and fortunately people who are no longer with us, such as Johann Sebastian Bach, his double Johann Sebastian Mastropiero, Groucho, Marx.»

Didí Gutiérrez

«In such a musical country, there will be more than enough readers that will answer the call of Calla y escucha. It is a mandatory reading to normalize the criteria of those who aspire to a comprehensive training in the wide range deployed by the different kinds of music of the 21st Century.»

Eduardo Cruz Vázquez / Paso libre

«Eduardo Huchín Sosa offers a volume akin to the informative Anglo-Saxon essay, in an enjoyable book that captivates the readers because of the journalistic tone deposited of any kind of scholarship, in which he also introduces references to studies and articles dealing with the axial theme of each chapter. In this manner, Calla y escucha covers the synergies between processes that question power structures and that claim creative and technical findings that have been underappreciated.»

Tibetan theories say that children choose parents. According to this vision of life, three months before the start of pregnancy, each soul makes the choice according to the lessons to be learned in that life.

Of the “divine” links on Earth, the most powerful is that of the Mother because it generates in us a deep learning, so painful that sometimes it hurts, so loving that, sometimes, it mutilates and overprotects. All in the name of love. This book does not intend to heal the wounds of the most important relationship of our existence, such as that of the mother with a child, but it does seek, without judgments, without prejudice, without resentment, the understanding of the causes and effects.

In short, this is a compilation of touching stories told from that wounded child who, through forgiveness, gets rid of his chronic pain and walks towards the path of emotional liberation, reconciliation and gratitude.

This book is a compilation of honest and moving stories that arise from the wounds of injured children, deep revelations, such as the fact that the presence of a father in the children is irreplaceable. The father, the first love of the daughters, the first superhero of the sons, the one who scares the ghosts at night and pretends to be a horse by the day, riding with the child on the shoulders, the figure that is used as a threat when the Mother's authority becomes weak. Any wound in our hearts can be healed and transformed into a source of strength and inspiration to have a better quality of life and emotional fullness.

The path of forgiveness is traveled when it is understood, because understanding is one of the most luminous manifestations of love, that love that heals everything, that every cure, that feeds the best of ourselves.
